Entrance to Lincoln's Inn One of the most important of the Inns of Court, built on a site once occupied by the mansion of the Earl of Lincoln, and before that by the ancient convent of the Black Friars. The Gateway shown in the picture is not the old one in Chancery Lane, but it by Sir Thomas Lovell in 1518, but that which faces Lincoln's Inn Fields, one of the largest squares in London, noted for its plane trees, where Lord William Russell was executed in 1688.
